GARBAGE SERVICE OUTLINED IN NEW CITY ORDINANCE

PEOPLE ARE TO DECIDE

Measure Introduced Last Night Will be Passed if Electors Vote in Favor of Collection by the City at November Election, Water Works Measure Up

Details of the form in which the garbage question is to be submitted to the voters at the November election were discussed at a special meeting of council last night when a form of ordinance was introduced by Councilman John L. Cains.

electors give their approval with any company properly equipped to give such service or with any company that aims to provide such equipment within two months after being awarded the contract. A bond in the sum of $10,000 is to be filed by the contractor to insure faithful performance of the provisions of the ordinance. The ordinance provides that all refuse must be kept in separate receptacles from those used for cans, broken glass crockery etc and that dumping of garbage anywhere within the city is expressly prohibited. Such contract is to be let in October for the purpose of letting not yet decided whether it becomes effective on January 1, 1916.

November was introduced. This supplants a previously introduced ordinance on this subject. Its new provisions are that the mayor shall issue a proclamation setting forth that the matter is to be called on by November so that they shall include it on the ballot. Otherwise the new measure is the same as the former one—authorizing the city council to issue bonds to the sum of $150,000 for the purchase of the plant of the Connell's Mills Water Company or to build a

The ordinance, however, provides that only the regularly elected chief shall be paid this salary. The matter was left open until next Monday, when he is scheduled to be elected.

The bond of Samuel Holmes of Scotland in the sum of $1 700 for the proper completion of sewers in Blackstone avenue and South Arch street was submitted and approved.

All members of council were present.

"THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY."—The eleventh episode of the famous serial, "The Diamond From the Sky," is the attraction at the Palace Theatre. The story is an exciting drama, and the acting is interesting. The story is an exciting drama, and the acting is interesting. The story is an exciting drama, and the acting is interesting.

"TWIN BEDS"

The first trial presentation of "Twin Beds," the French farce by Salmeyre, La Folle and Margaret Mayo which New York honored by launching it at its forty-sixth consecutive try-out, was given at the Colonial Theatre on Tuesday, September 28, presented by Silvio & Company, who, in addition to "Twin Beds," had "Under Cover," "The Girl in the Red Velvet Dress" and "The Blue Bird." "Twin Beds" is their fourth big hit of admittedly the worst season in the history of the theatre, that of 1914-1915, and who have already this season "under cover" of "Twin Beds" secured the twenty-sixth biggest success of 1914-1915.

"Twin Beds" is a tolling clock, whose-gone faces, such as a high wheel, are terminating in a bell. It is a play standing side by side to its dialogue, and almost and sure in its characterization. Its story is built around what happens when six people, in assentments of their own free will, and without design, do above each other, and having made the initial blunder of being neighbors, then strive to recapture the peace and privacy of their several homes. In the end, however, they work, Myr and Mrs. Larkins, also poorly woe, and the Signor and Signora Monti, and for ten mortal years, are the sex whose mutual welcome aims to make them happy, and have been so wholly in mutual war to the death.

It is in "Twin Beds" that you will find the exorbitant little Blanche Hawkins who couldn't see why her domestic maid didn't want her to bring in the neighbors for parties; and the colossal Signora Monti, who, having found a fat Italian tenor singer for $10 a night in a Brooklyn cabaret, and after he had sung her through the rankings of the $2,000 per night stars of the Metropolitan, having married him for life, could not see why he should Charles E. Specht, who announced some weeks ago that he was a candidate for mayor of Johnstown, has resigned from the city council with the explanation that he dropped out of the race because he has been too busy in New York City taking orders for war supplies.

He sold to the French government 200,000 tons of Pocahontas coal at a very fair price, and gave the same government an option on 5,000 acres of coal land in West Virginia.

As a specialist who has spent many years in the study and treatment of stomach troubles, I have been forced to observe that the majority of those who complain of stomach trouble possess stomachs that are absolutely healthy and normal. The real trouble and difficulty is excessive acid in the stomach, and this is the cause of fermentation. Hyper-acidity irritates the delicate lining of the stomach and food fermentation causes wind which ascends the stomach absorbing the oxygen and causing flatulence. Thus both acid and fermentation interfere with and retard the process of digestion. The stomach is usually healthy and normal, but the excessive acid causes the fermentation of those foreign elements—acid and wind. In all such cases—and they comprise over 90 per cent. of all stomach difficulties—the first and most important step is to neutralize the acid and stop the fermentation by taking in a little warm or cold water immediately after eating, from one to two cups of water. If fermented material is present, the water should be undressed with lemon juice, the acid and only truly effective antacid and food corrective known. The acid will be neutralized and the fermentation stopped almost instantly and your stomach will then proceed to digest the food in a healthy, normal manner. Be sure to ask your druggist for the bisulphated manganese, as this is the only antacid with the above-mentioned properties.—E. J. G.—Adv.

Following Tuesday's election in the first ward for council here, it is a question of who is who for the nomination and so far this has not been settled. The county commissioners have the ballot and the four-year ballots it was stated that there would be one four year man elected and one two-year man, but the names of all the candidates were for four years. The county commissioners at the election board said that there was a mistake in the ballot and the four candidates in the four year column brought a vote as follows: Rindie B.
Goldsmith, 20; Charles Cunningham
7; Samuel Swartz 1; and John Swartz 71. Swartz's name was written by eight in the two-year column and the question is whether Goldsmith and Cunningham will be the nominations of Goldsmith and Swartz.
In the Third ward the candidates knew of this and tossed a penny for who would be the two-year and four-year man and the ballots were fixed

Yesterday when Mr. Sullivan took the ballots to Greensburg his inquiries from the commissioners of the mistake was in the printing of the ballot, was answered that it was not, that it was the mistake of the candidates. Now they are wondering who will be who.

HOW TO GET RID OF ENTARDIC

If you have catarrh, catarrhal deafness, or head noises go to your druggist and get 1 lb. of Earsal (heal noise strength), take this home add to it  $\frac{1}{4}$  pint of hot water and 4 oz. of granulated sugar. Take 1 tablespoonful 4 times a day.

This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy and the catarrhus stop dropping into the throat.

It is easy to make, tastes pleasant and costs little. Every one who has catarrh should give this treatment a trial. You will probably find it is just what you need.

Princeton Takes New Step Toward

Democracy.
Special to The Courier.
PRINCETON, N. J., Sept. 23.—A new step toward democracy in American colleges was taken today when, with the opening of Princeton University, student waiters appeared at the dining tables of the University Commons. The number of college boys in the Commons as head waiters and waiters is about seventy and in return for their services the University will reimburse the waiters for their expenses. The schedule of work is planned so as not to conflict with the University courses.

The daily routine of the new student waiters is arranged that each man will serve two meals a day and eat the third meal with his class-meal will be breakfast, some days lunch and at other times dinner. The work of setting table and cleaning up afterwards will be left in the hands of professional help. From present indications the University is trying to make the work of the waiters as light as possible. In the kitchen various mechanical devices have been installed for dishwashing and other needs. L. A. Hilmyer, a graduate of Princeton last year, will act as head-waiter in charge of the entire staff.

THE BATTLE-CRY

By CHARLES NEVILLE BUCK

COPYRIGHT BY CHARLES NEVILLE BUCK

When the theft of the horses was discovered Anne Haverly sent pursuing parties to ride the roads in both directions.

It had seemed to Haverly wiser to withhold his warning from all save those whom he needed to use. To all the rest the affair had come without notice, and the hue and cry which followed the ruse was genuine in its excitement.

But in a very few moments the pandemonium fell away and silence supplanted the shouting. The mountains behind, where several men were stealthily seeking escape and many others were stalking them, lay silent in the moonlight.

A hundred yards beyond the window a small and inquisitive knot of men gathered around a figure that had launched forward, sprawling on a creaked rifle. Someone turned the figure up and straightened its limbs so that they should not stiffen in such grotesque attitude. The face, with the yellow lantern-light shining down on it, was the face of a boy of twenty. Its thin lips were set in a grim smile of satisfaction, for death had overtaken him without a suspicion of its coming.

Perhaps, had a photograph of his riding been taken, it would have disclosed the portrait of Cal Douglas, pausing at the open window.

"His little Nash Watt!" exclaimed a surprised voice, using the distinctive which in the mountains takes the place of junior and stays with a man well on in life. The victim who had been designated to avenge the death of Nash Watt had been Nash Watt's younger brother.

Meanwhile the pursuing horsemen were gaining slowly on those that fled. The murder squad had failed and must bear back to Milt McBrier. If they over got back, a narrative of frustrated effort. They were bitterly angry and proportionately desperate. So, as they clattered along the empty road, mooting no enemy whom they could shoot down in amputation of their wrath, they satisfied themselves with raising their war cry for the benefit of the sleeping cabins.

A little distance beyond Pitch Mc-Nash's place lay a cross-trail by which they might find a circuitous way back over the ridge, but it was too steep and broken to ride. They could make better time on foot over the "roughs," so there they abandoned their mounts and plunged into the timber. When the pursuers came up with the discarded horses they realized that further effort in the night would be useless. The heavy flanks and panting nostrils of the horses testified that they had been only a few minutes late, they took a last chance and plunged into the thicket.

There a single defiant shot, sent from a lone way up the hillside, was their only challenge, and their volley of reply, fired at the flash, was merely a retort of hatred. But even in the isolation of the hills certain news travels on wings, and the morning would find every cabin dweller wearing a face of grim and mullen realization. The phrase which Pitch Mc-Nash had whispered to his boy would travel to the headwaters of every fork, and the faces of the women would once more wear the drawn misery of anxiety for their men.

CHAPTER VII.

It was into this newly charged atmosphere that Juanita Holland and her missionary guide rode in the morning mist.

Good Anne Talbott was in many ways an inadequate ally. He was both narrow and illiterate, but he was earnest.

At last the girl rode resolutely up to her escort's saddle-skirts and asked: "Brother Talbott, hadn't you better tell me what it all means?"

The missionary lifted a face that was almost haggard.

"It means," he said, with no idea of irreverence, "that Satan's got both underhills—an' God help this country."

Then he sketched for her the history of the feud and deduced conclusions from what they had both seen and heard.

She listened with a sickening heart until he changed the subject and told her that the Widow Everson, with whom she was to stop, had a sizable house where she would be comfortable.

At last the girl saw, still a long way off, a fertile little valley, where the corn seemed taller and richer than on the scattered coverts. There, like a tiny matchbox, on a high level near which the wall of mountain broke into a broad gateway, she could make out a house. It was not of logs, but of brick, and stood in an enclosure that looked more like the Blue Grass than the mountains.

"Does ye see yon brick house nigh ther gwat? That's Bad Anne's place, an' over ther across ther ridge, three mile away by crows-flight an' a half-day's ride by ther roads, is whar Milt McBrier dwells. Ye kaint see hit from hyar."

It was almost sundown when they reached the house of the Widow Everson, and at sight of the woman standing at the fence to meet them Juanita's heart took strength. This house was not of logs, but of undressed boards, with gaily painted window and door frames of red, and although two days ago she would have called it mean, she had revised her views enough to regard it now as almost magnificent.

The widow dwelt here with her two sons, and the trio, by virtue of great diplomacy, had succeeded in maintaining a neutrality throughout the strife.

The comforts of the place were such as must serve to give contentment where learning is arduous and the mail carrier comes twice a week, but cleanliness dwelt there and homely cheer of a sort.

Before they had yet entered the house the girl saw a horseman approaching with an escort of several men who carried rifles balanced across their pommels. They came from the east, and though Juanita did not know who they were, she recognized the central rider, himself unarmed, to be a person of consequence.

He was tall, and under his faded coat his rather lean figure fell into an attitude of well-muscled strength despite his fullness of years.

"Evenin', ma'am," said the newcomer. "No, I hain't a-goin' ter fight. I jest heered that Brother Talbott was a-comin' over hyar, an' I wanted speech with him."

The missionary nodded.

"All right, Milt," he said, and the girl knew, as she had already suspected, that here was a second of her chief enemies.

"I reckon ye all knowa what happened last night," she heard him say slowly. "It war a pity, an' I hears that ther Haverlys are a-chargin' hit up origin me. Ther's nat'ral enough, I reckon. Ther's 'tows that I'd walk plumb acrost boll on a rotten plank ter do 'em injury. Ef they stopped ter reason hit out a spell they'd recollect that I went over ther ter Parli an' let a judge that didn't own his own soul an' a jury they hed done packed, clear one of ther kindfols for killin' a cousin o' mine—an' that I never raised my hand. I reckon they didn't hardly hear no call ter figger that I was skeered of them. I done what I done because I wanted peace. I was ter lettin' ther law take hits co's, even when I knowed the cote war crooked as a drunkard's elbow."

He paused, and no one spoke, so at last he went on again.

"But little Nash Watt war young an' hot-headed. He could hardly see hit in ther light of wisdom, and he didn't come ter me for counsel. So he jest went hell-gittin' over ther with some other boys that he overpowered—an' he didn't come back. I'm sorry."

Right fond of Little Nash, but I hain't complainin' none. He started trouble an' he got hit."

Again the dark giant paused; then he came to his point. His voice was regretful, almost sad, but tinged with resignation.

"So Little Nash is a-lyin' dead down ther, an' no McBrier durst'n venture down ter fetch his body home."

He waved a hand toward the west, and the faces of his escort lowered. They seemed the faces of men who "durst" go anywhere, but their chief went on.

"I knowed, Brother Talbott, that ye sarnes Almighty God, an' that ther hain't no word ye carries but what all men will listen ter ye, so I've done come ter ye in behalf of Little Nash's maw, an' his wimmenfols. I 'lowed I'd ask ye of ye'd ride down ther and fetch home ther body."

The missionary nodded, and though he was travel-stained and very tired, he said: "I'll start right now."

Then Milt McBrier continued: "An' ef ye sees hit, ye kin tell Anne Haverly that I hain't a suin' for peace, but that I hain't a-lyin' hit nuther, an' that ef he wants ther true ter go on I'm a-willin' ter have hit the way. I hain't holdin' no grudge on account of last night."

Good Anne Talbott shook his head sadly.

Juanita's eyes grew a little dimly as she thought of that desolated cabin where a mother and sisters were grieving for the boy who had been "hot-headed." Even the sight of his older kinsman, who sat his horse with such composure while his eyes wandered off to the purple haze of the far mountains, stirred in her an emotion of sympathy.

Of course she knew nothing of the ten acres of "bottom land" which were to be Little Nash's when Cal Douglas should have come to breathe, nor how it was covetousness and cold thrift that sent him out with his rifle in the night. She only heard the McBrier say, "I'm much obliged;" and saw him turn his cavalier's east.

The tired missionary started his mule west again, and she herself followed the Widow Everson into the cabin which was for the time to be her home. When the widow left her she remained in her saddlebags and drew out a small leather case. She sat for a long while silent in her slouch-bottomed rocking chair, gazing wearily out at the west, where sunset fires were beginning to kindle, and where an old-rope haze was drawing over the valley and glowing more brightly in the twisting ribbon of a far-away stream. But her eyes came often back from the panorama out there to dwell a little wistfully on a photograph in the leather frame.

It was the picture of the man she had loved and lost. He had been just then, with her courage at oblique, and had he stretched out his arms, she would have shaken her head wearily on abstract resolves and come into their embrace. But he was not there.

In the quaint conversation of the Widow Everson and her son Juanita found so much of the something that she had to school herself against too great an appreciation of their utterly unintentional humor. Though she was a "forlorn-on woman" to be taken on probation, it was only a matter of hours before the family capitulated, as people in general had a fashion of doing under the spell of her graciousness and charm. Jerry Everson, whom men accounted surly, for the first time in years brushed his shaggy hat and remembered not to "bang it on the floor," and Sam Everson hid him into the misty woods at dawn and brought home squirrels for her first breakfast in his house.

In the forenoon of her first day she left the house and, crawling the tiny garden where the weeds were already growing tall and rank enough to hint of future rugged victory, she made her way by a narrow trail that led to the crest of the ridge.

Juanita was steering her course for a patriarchal poplar that sent a straight shaft heavenward at the rim of the crest, opening its verdure like a great flag, unfurled on a mighty parapet. She knew that up there she could look two ways across the divide, and that her battlefield would be spread before her.

She looked to the east, and line after line of hills melted into the sky. She looked to the west, and there, too, they rose, phalanx on phalanx, to dissolve in a smoky haze that effaced the horizon. It seemed as if in a majesty of relentlessness they reached from sunrise to sunset, and so, as far as the locked-in life of their people went, they might.

She stood there a long while, and finally she saw, where for a space the road ran near the brick house, unshaded by the woods, a struggling little cottage. At its front rode a stoop-shouldered man in whom, even at that far distance, she thought she recognized the missionary. Behind him came a few horsemen riding in two squads, and between the squads crawled a "jolt-wagon" drawn by mules. She knew that the Haverlys were bringing back to the frontier the enemy's dead, and she shuddered at the cold reality.

It may have been three hours later that Good Anne Talbott rode up to the Widow Everson's. When the girl, who had returned long ago from the door she found him talking there with Milt McBrier, who had also ridden up, but from the other direction.

"Anne Haverly 'lows," the preacher was saying, "that he's done fetched home ther body of Little Nash Watt, an' that ther boy was shot ter death a-lyin' in ther level a hundred paces from the window whar Cal Douglas was a standin'!"

"I've done already acknowledged that," declared Milt in a voice into which crept a trace of truculent sultriness.

The missionary nodded. "I hain't quite through yet, Milt," he went on, evenly, and the girl who stood leaning against the door-frame, caught for an instant a sparkle of sardonic earnestness in his weary eyes.

"Anne is willin' ter take yore hand on this true. He's willin' ter stand pledge that ther Haverlys keeps faith. But I'm a preacher of the Gospel of God, Milt, and I don't low ter be no go-between without both of yon men does keep faith."

Milt McBrier stiffened resentfully, and his dark brows drew together under his hat brim.

"Does ye doubt that I'll do what I say?" he inquired in a voice too soft for sincerity.

The missionary did not drop his steady and compelling eyes from the gaze direct. It was as if he were running through the pupils of the other and searching the dark heart.

"I alms ter sue that ye both starts out fair, Milt," he said, still quietly. "An' ter that and I wint ter admonish ye both on ther terms of this settlement."

For an instant Milt McBrier's countenance of calm reflectiveness slipped from him and his voice rose rapidly. "Did Anne Haverly learn ye that speech?"

Good Anne Talbott shook his head sadly.

"No. I told Anne ther same thing I'm a-tellin' you. Neither Anne nor ther four men that fetches ther body will hev any sort of weapon about 'em when they comes acrost ther stile. Yore got ter give me yore hand that none of yore men hain't a-goin' ter be armed. I'm a servant of ther Most High God." For an instant fire blazed in the preacher's eyes and his voice mounted with fervor. "Fer years I've done sought ter leech his grace an' hit hatred of murder ter ther people of these hiar hills. When yon two men shaken hands on this true I alms ter be standin' by with a rifle in my hand, an' ef I see anything crooked I'm goin' ter use hit."

The dark giant stood for a time silent, then he gravely nodded his head. "Them terms suits me," he said briefly.

The two men walked down to the fence and separated there, going in opposite directions.

A few minutes later Juanita, still standing fascinatedly by the doorway, was looking out across the shoulder of the missionary. He presided at the threshold with grave eyes, and, even after these peaceful years, there was something of familiar carous in the way his brown hand lay on his rifle-lock. Then the girl saw a strange and primitive ratification of treaty.

On either side of the little porch stood a group of solemn men, mostly bearded, mostly content, and all unarmed. In front of them, at the right stood Anne Haverly, his eyes still the dominant feature of the picture.

Over across from him was the taller and older chieftain of the other clan. They stood there gravely, with a courtesy that cloaked their hatred. Out in the road was the "jolt-wagon," and in its deep bed the girl could see the canvas that covered its burden.

As Bad Anne took his place at the front of his escort his gaze met that of Juanita. He did not speak, but for an instant she saw his face harden, his eyes narrow, and his lips not themselves. It was the glance of one who has been lashed across the face and who cannot strike back, but who will not soon forget.

This time the girl's eyes did not drop, and certainly they held no hint of relenting or plea for forgiveness.

But at that moment the head of the Haverlys turned from her and began speaking.

"I Gives Ye My Hand, Milt McBrier."

"I got your message, Milt," he said casually. "An' I reckon yon got my answer. I've brought back Little Nash."

"Milt," he earnestly announced at the end of his scratching white the ghost of an ironical smile glinted in his eyes, though it left his lips grave. "I've got several horses an' mules down ther in my barn that we found hitched out in ther timber when Nash an' his friends took to the level."

Again he paused and studied the faces of the McBrier men before he went on. "One of 'em is yon own roan mare, Milt. One of 'em belongs ter Sam Hart, and one is Bad Anne's. He pointed out each man as he spoke."

"Ye can get 'em any time ye send down for 'em."

The girl caught her breath and, despite her dislike, acknowledged the cool insolence with which Anne had answered Milt's plea of innocence. Milt replied only with a scowl, so Anne contemptuously continued, as though to himself:

"Hit's right smart pity for a feller to get out shootin' in the night-time an' to take a kinsman's horse—wint ter takin' his counsel. It might lead to some misunderstandin'."

A baleful glare flashed deep in the eyes of the taller man, and from the benchmen at his back came an uneasy shuffle of brogans.

But the voice of Good Anne Talbott relieved the tension.

"Stiddy, ther mon," he quietly cautioned. "Ye didn't hardly meet ter talk 'bout horses. I'll lead them nags back myself, Milt."

Then Anne Haverly stepped forward and held out his hand.

"I gives ye my hand, Milt McBrier," he said, "that ther true goes on."

"An' I gives ye mine," rejoined the other.

After a perfunctory shake the two turned together and, went down the steps. The girl saw both squads lifting the covered burden from the wagon and carrying it around the road, where the other wagon waited. She believed that the feud was ended, but

It is doubtful if either of the principals whose hands had joined parted with great trust in the integrity of the other's intentions. It is certain that one of them at least was already making plans for the future, not at all in accordance with that compact of peace.

CARLYLE'S TEMPER.

It Was the Very Reverse of Bad, Said His Old Mother-in-law.

Carlyle had temper? Not at all, if we are to place any belief in the testimony of the maid behind the broom. One of Carlyle's servants, Jessie, who on marrying became Mrs. Broadfoot, has left a very favorable impression of her old master, says the London Standard.

"I could have lived with him all my days," she says, "and it always makes me angry when I read, as I sometimes do, that he was bad tempered. He was the very reverse. In my opinion I never would have left him when I did if I had not been going to get married. I took great pride in attending on him and studying all his wants and wishes."

"It was one of my duties to rush out and move on all street organs and things of that kind. Many a time in the morning before he rose I used to fill his pipe, the short clay he used in his bedroom, for him and strike the match to light it. I always cut up his tobacco. He bought it in flat cakes and kept his tin box regularly supplied. He was always so grateful for these little services."

So much for popular belief and the dictum of the democratic servant biographer.

Send Swept Asia.

In the arid lands of central Asia the air is reported as often laden with fine detritus, which drifts like snow around conspicuous objects and tends to bury them in a dust drift. Even when there is no apparent wind the air is described as thick with fine dust, and a yellow sediment covers everything. In Khokan this dust sometimes so obscures the sun that at midday one cannot see to read the print without a lamp.

Where Scotland Joins England.

The width of the island of Great Britain at the point of contact between England and Scotland is about sixty miles. The River Tweed divides the two countries for a few miles at the east, and the Cheviot hills serve as a boundary for the greater part of the west of the distance.

TROTTER BEATEN; COLLIER AGAIN IS CLOSE TO THE TOP

Brathwood Allows Trotter
Only One Hit and No Run.

HERRON REGISTERS A KICK

Brathwood is Property of the Pittsburgh Federals and Thus Not Eligible to Participate in Fourth
Cup Series. Other Protests About It.

Collier once more tied with Leisinger No. 2 when Trotter was defeated last evening by the former team 1-0, with Brathwood pitching his usual ailing ball. Collier got the single run in the first inning on two passed balls and after that Leisinger, backed by good holding field, threw down to three scattered hits.

Brathwood was on the job for Collier and Trotter did not get a man beyond third base. Trotter got hit once off his foot that was laid out, he hit one to first which was covered by Rehneck. Brathwood covered the bag but his first baseman threw too low and the ball eluded Brathwood's mitts. It was a close play and the official scorer gave Leisinger the benefit of the doubt, marking a hit to his credit.

The game was played under protest, Manager Herron of Trotter claiming that Brathwood was the property of the Pitts. Federals. Brathwood, however, denies this, saying that while he tried out with that team he has not signed a contract. If what Brathwood says is true, he is still eligible to play for Collier.

Herron intends to carry the protest through and the matter will be decided before Collier's game with Leisinger No. 2 on Saturday. Had Herron not protested yesterday it is probable that Leisinger would have Saturday so it is well that Herron did as the matter will be settled before the Collier-Leisinger No. 2 game. Trotter plays at Mansfield on Saturday.

But it is only one expression of a thought that is common to many. And after all, isn't knowing it's right one of the very greatest pleasures we have in buying something new?

The New Suits Here Displayed

Are absolutely correct to the finest detail. Nowhere will you find greater elegance or more genuine quality. In many models a decided Russian note is struck as is shown by the many fur trimmings. Braids are also a popular trimming. Coats vary greatly in length. Skirts are short and full. Velvets, Broadcloths, Poplins, Serges, and Gabardines in green, brown, navy, grey, etc., etc., are the popular materials and colors. Buy it here and know it's right.
